

Lean Sigma Sponsor Programme

Creating a Sustainable Difference

Lean Sigma Sponsor Two-Day Programme

The process of improvement cannot be undertaken without the full use of the skills, knowledge and expertise of those who provide the services every day. This includes senior executives who need to understand what the implications are for their role as leaders including providing overt support to its effective implementation.

Our two-day Lean Sigma Sponsor programme is designed to give senior executives an insight into how Lean Six Sigma's logical approach to process improvement can be applied to service delivery and in the office in all types of organisations. There are two key lines of thinking – establishing the right culture, with a good understanding of the principles throughout the organisation and promoting the right improvement projects, those that can deliver sustainable benefits quickly.

Leaders need to ensure that there is a good understanding of the principles throughout the organisation, top to bottom, but most importantly provide explicit support to its effective implementation. The programme introduces executives to Lean Six Sigma's logical approach to process improvement which helps organisations differentiate themselves from their competition by doing things better, faster, at lower cost, and with less waste.

Through a practical, hands-on approach, participants learn about implementation approaches, the DMAIC methodology, personal responsibilities, the organisational resources required, and the barriers that need to be removed to make Lean Sigma a success.

It enables rapid understanding of what improvements can be realised and provides an insight into approaches and techniques but also the behavioural understanding that delegates can take back to their business. The knowledge gained and lessons learned are practical and meaningful. They can be used in any organisation to drive reduced costs and improve levels of service to help organisations differentiate themselves from their competition.
