

Virtual Facilitation

Virtual facilitation for change and improvement projects and programmes

Why Virtual Facilitation?

We are all using a range of different meeting and communication tools and the results are often incoherent and unpredictable. Video-conferences, telephone conferences, email chains, online forums, social media, and of course face-to-face meetings are often experienced as disjointed. What should help save time and money often ends up creating inefficiencies or at least not fulfilling the potential for more effective and efficient working.

What is Virtual Facilitation?

Put simply, it is the art of making it easier and more effective to manage projects and programmes. We focus on the outcomes you are seeking to achieve for a project or programme or for communication across a project. We help you design a process which will make best use of the different types of technology available. And we provide a neutral independent facilitator to handle the process so that you can concentrate on the content of the project.

We work with different formats including telephone conferences, video conferences, online forums, social media, and even virtual worlds.

How We Can Help

We offer two services:

- We facilitate projects and programmes, helping to put together an approach to meeting your outcomes using one or more virtual platforms, and usually a combination, and providing an experienced, independent neutral facilitator to support the group in achieving its goals. The facilitator can challenge the group to see things differently and when appropriate can focus on keeping the group on track.
- We train your staff in effective virtual meetings. They can join one of our open access courses, or we can tailor this to your organisation. This training takes place virtually and is provided by experienced trainers and facilitators. This training complements the existing skills of experienced project and programme managers and enables them to use those skills to maximum effect across the range of virtual and face-to-face environments.

Our Team

Our team are experienced and trained in face-to-face facilitation and are also certified online facilitators. They have over thirty years' experience in supporting groups in all sectors and professions to achieve their outcomes.
