

Productivity

Improving managers' competence to deliver better results

Productivity is an ongoing concern for the construction sector. The people, process and product conundrum that make up the sum of many parts influencing quality and efficiencies are not showing any significant signs of improvement.

Productivity is a test of management's competence in making resources productive. Upskilling supervisors/managers with the skills required to make fact-based decisions and improving productivity is critical to success. We recognise that all organisations are different, so our programme(s) gives businesses the freedom to select from a number of options, with the content designed to deliver the specific skills and knowledge required.

We believe that this in-built flexibility and customer focus means we are well placed to meet the specific development needs of construction companies.

The Programme

Through a combination of teaching, practical exercises, simulation, and shared experiences, delegates will become familiar with the capabilities required to make informed data-based decisions, and be able to offer senior management solutions and not problems. The three-day programme includes a range of topics which are designed to address the hard and soft elements which drive productivity. Examples of programme content include:

- ▶ Role of the supervisor/ manager
- ▶ Project management – reading and controlling projects
- ▶ Collaborative planning – with trades on site
- ▶ Supply chain – inventory management
- ▶ Managing quality, cost and delivery
- ▶ Problem analysis and problem solving
- ▶ Managing the process of change
- ▶ Dealing with difficult situations

Our Learning Principles

Our approach is based on linking personal and development with business outcomes. We achieve this through minimising the barriers to knowledge transfer, converting 'can do' into 'will do' by addressing the personal and practical issues involved and translating individual competence into business competence. Crucially we ensure that development is closely linked to practical application by aligning learning material very closely to everyday reality, addressing the specific skills required and providing a basis for measuring the results.

Benefits

- ▶ Develop the skills of your supervisors/managers
- ▶ Improving productivity, efficiency and profit and providing improved customer service and value to your customers
- ▶ Help identify challenges within your own business
- ▶ Motivate individuals and encourage team work and collaboration
- ▶ Offer practical solutions to implement
